MESSAGE FROM THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Dear Law Enforcement Official:

Identity theft, and the fraud and scams associated with it, continue to victimize the citizens of Wisconsin. The Wisconsin Department of Justice (DOJ) is working with Wisconsin law enforcement to address this problem in several important ways. This is a critical effort on behalf of the safety of our citizens, because unfortunately the crime is on the increase.

According to 2004 statistics, there were 2,646 identity theft complaints reported to the Federal Trade Commission from Wisconsin victims. Nationwide there were 246,570 complaints. The financial and psychological impact to the many victims is enormous. No one is immune from identity theft. It is an equal opportunity crime that affects all walks of life. It does not discriminate by sex, age, race, creed, religion, marital status, and social or economic status.

Wisconsin has made considerable strides to assist law enforcement officials and prosecutors in combating this crime. The Wisconsin identity theft class H felony statute, 943.201 and 943.203, was revised and strengthened, effective August 8, 2003. The revised state statute addressed identities stolen from the deceased; stolen identities used for employment; stolen identities used to avoid civil or criminal process; and stolen identities used to harm the reputation, property, person or estate of an individual.

A very important element of the revised state statute: the requirement that law enforcement agencies prepare reports on any local cases in which personal identifying information and/or documents are reported to be or to appear to be in the possession of another individual or individuals, in violation of the statute – or if such information was used or was attempted to be used in violation of the statute. The state statute further directs that if the law enforcement agency does not appear to have jurisdiction to investigate the violation, they shall inform the victim which law enforcement agency may have jurisdiction. A copy of the above mentioned law enforcement report shall be furnished upon request to the victim, subject to payment of a reasonable copy fee. The police report is a critical component needed by the victim when they go through the arduous task of restoring their identity. Another important element of the revised legislation addresses the issue of venue. Wisconsin state statute 971.19 (11) provides that the defendant may be tried in the county where the victim resided at the time of the offense.

Recent federal legislation has also been passed which assists law enforcement agencies and victims. Examples include free credit reports yearly from each of the three credit reporting bureaus; victims and investigating officers can get victims' identity theft related transaction records directly from businesses without first obtaining a subpoena; only one telephone call is necessary to have fraud alerts placed at each of the three credit reporting bureaus; and truncated credit card numbers on receipts are highly effective in reducing identity theft.

(Cont . . .)

In March of 2005, the Wisconsin Department of Justice, in response to database security breaches occurring at ChoicePoint, LexisNexis, and DSW Shoe Warehouse, urged Wisconsin businesses to immediately undertake measures to ensure the security of data containing citizens' sensitive personal information. DOJ also sent letters to the companies involved in the data breaches seeking information regarding the Wisconsin consumers possibly affected by the breaches.

Currently, we are assisting Senator Russ Decker in drafting legislation to address enhancing the criminal penalties for those who perpetrate identity theft crimes against "vulnerable" victims; credit report freezes; mail theft; protection of social security numbers of employees; prohibiting discrimination against an individual who refuses to disclose his/her social security number; and prohibiting social security numbers as identifying numbers on driver's licenses and identification cards. The Wisconsin Attorney General's Office is also developing a statewide identity theft training program for law enforcement officials and citizens.

I thank you for your continued hard work and dedication in fighting identity theft. Together, through education and enforcement, we can make a difference in reducing the number of identity theft related incidents, and successfully prosecute those who perpetrate this crime upon our citizens.

Very truly yours,

State v. Matthew J. Knapp
2005 WI 127- decided by the
Wisconsin Supreme Court-July 14, 2005

Introduction:

In an earlier legal point article this case was discussed as it was originally decided by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in July, 2003, in which the court held that derivative evidence from a Miranda violation should be suppressed. Since the original Wisconsin Supreme Court decision in Knapp the United States Supreme Court dealt with a similar issue in United States v. Patane, 542 U.S. 630 (2004). In Patane the United States Supreme Court held that derivative evidence from a Miranda violative statement is still admissible, a holding directly in conflict with what our Supreme Court held in Knapp I. Accordingly the state brought the case back to our Supreme Court to see if it wished to change its opinion in light of the Patane holding. Our Wisconsin Supreme Court in Knapp II reiterated its position that derivative evidence from a Miranda violation should be suppressed even if it would be admissible in federal actions under Patane.

Facts:

In the early morning hours a woman was murdered in her home in Watertown, Wisconsin. She was beaten to death by a baseball bat. Police learned that the victim and Knapp had been seen together at a bar and that Knapp was on probation with a condition that he not consume any alcohol. When Knapp's parole agent learned that Knapp had been drinking he ordered an apprehension request and requested that the police arrest Knapp. The police arrested Knapp.

Knapp told the police that he was trying to call his attorney but the officer said he had to go to the police station and the officer did not read Knapp his Miranda rights at that time. Before leaving for the police station Knapp and the officer went to Knapp's bedroom so that Knapp could put on his shoes and while in the bedroom the officer questioned Knapp about the clothes he had been wearing the prior evening and Knapp pointed to a pile of clothes on the floor. The officer took the clothes which were ultimately examined revealing that they had the victim's blood on them.

Defendant's Position:

The defendant argued that he should have been read his Miranda warning before being questioned about his clothes as he was in custody and the police were looking for evidence against him. The defendant argues that since there was a Miranda violation the clothes were fruits of the poisonous tree and should have been suppressed.

The State's Position:

The state could no longer argue the Miranda point as that had been earlier determined by the court but argued that in light of Patane the clothes should still be admissible into evidence as they were not a statement but rather derivative evidence coming from a Miranda violative statement.

The Court's Holding:

The court held that the Miranda principle has been elevated to a constitutional right; that being a failure to read Miranda where such a reading is required- a subject is interrogated while in custody- is a constitutional violation. Consequently, when Miranda is violated then all the evidence the Miranda violative statement directly led to is suppressed as "fruits of the poisonous statement". The Court recognized that the US Supreme Court had decided the same issue differently in Patane but reasoned that they were free to interpret the Wisconsin Constitution differently to afford its citizens more protections than those provided by the United States Constitution.

However the court did reiterate the principle that a Miranda violative statement which is otherwise voluntary while not admissible in the case in chief is admissible for impeachment purposes.

Key Point:

Now more than ever compliance with Miranda is important. This is so because not only is the confession itself not admissible except to impeach, all the physical evidence derived from the statement is also inadmissible.

All other aspects of Miranda remain as before; that being that Miranda is only required when interrogating a person in custody about a criminal matter or interrogating a person who has already been charged about the charged matter.

ELECTRONIC RECORDING TRAINING

Two recent decisions by the Wisconsin Supreme Court, State v. Dubose and State v. Jerrell, C.J., and a bill passed by the Legislature that awaits the Governor's signature, will soon require law enforcement officers to make significant changes in investigative practices.

In Dubose, the court held that eyewitness evidence obtained in a show-up is inadmissible unless conducting it was necessary. Show-ups are deemed unnecessary unless officers lack probable cause to arrest or other circumstances prevent conducting a lineup or using a photo array. In Jerrell, C.J., the court held in pertinent part that officers must electronically record custodial interrogations of juveniles.

In response to these two decisions, the state Legislature has enacted bills that will require changes in police procedure. Law enforcement agencies must soon adopt and implement written policies governing eyewitness identification procedures, with a goal of minimizing the possibility of mistaken identifications. In addition to recording custodial interrogations of juveniles, officers will also be required to record custodial interrogations of adults suspected of committing felonies.

The Office of the Attorney General has developed recommendations and supporting materials that enable your agency to comply with requirements governing identification procedure. The eyewitness identification best practices model and guidelines are available on our law enforcement website: www.wilenet.org.

With respect to custodial recording, we are conducting a comprehensive review and analysis of the best practices. We have customized what we have learned to conform to Wisconsin law, and have scheduled the following introductory law enforcement training:

While these legislative requirements can reasonably be expected to impose costs on agencies, some as yet unanticipated, we expect substantial benefits to law enforcement. Better identification procedures reduce the likelihood of misidentification, and thereby protect the innocent. Recording custodial interrogations creates an objective, reviewable record that prevents unnecessary litigation over what happens in the interview room. It can deter false allegations of misconduct, and provides the highest quality proof of a suspect's confession.

ARTICLE 36 OF THE VIENNA CONVENTION ON CONSULAR RELATIONS:
Be Sure to Inform Every Defendant from a Foreign Country of his “Right to Consul”

The United States of America is a party to the international treaty known as the “Vienna Convention on Consular Relations.” Article 36 of that treaty was created to ensure free and prompt communication between a foreign national arrested in a country that is a party to the treaty and his nation’s local consular post. Article 36 is binding on the states as well as the federal government. Therefore, a local police or sheriff’s department in Wisconsin should promptly notify an arrested foreign national of his right to contact his local consulate. Then, if the arrestee so requests, the department should contact the consular post on the arrestee’s behalf and allow its officers to visit him.

The consequences of a state’s failure to comply with Article 36 are uncertain. At the present time in Wisconsin, there are no direct consequences within the criminal prosecution itself. Specifically, the Wisconsin courts will not allow the foreign defendant to suppress either physical or testimonial evidence because of the State’s failure to comply with the treaty. See State v. Navarro, 2003 WI App 50, ¶20, 260 Wis. 2d 396, 659 N.W.2d 487. However, the Navarro decision should not be seen as a license to ignore Article 36. There is a continuing danger that the United States Supreme Court will issue a contrary ruling that will be binding on the states. Such a ruling would effectively overrule Navarro.

Meanwhile, the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit (which hears appeals from the Wisconsin federal courts) recently decided that county law enforcement officials’ failure to inform a foreign national of his “right to consul” created a cause of action under the Alien Tort Statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1350, cognizable in federal court. See Jogi v. Voges, 425 F.3d 367 (7th Cir. 2005). In other words, a law enforcement officer can be sued in federal court if he fails to provide the required notice. The court did not decide what kind of damages the foreign national would be entitled to. Thus, even if a failure to inform won’t lead to the suppression of evidence, it may lead to an expensive lawsuit against individual officers.

In short, law enforcement authorities should be sure to comply with Article 36 whenever they arrest a foreign national.
