MESSAGE FROM THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Dear Law Enforcement Official:

The TIME System, managed by the Crime Information Bureau of the Division of Law Enforcement Services, is a well known tool to law enforcement. It is used approximately 150,000 times a day all across the state. As law enforcement officers, you've become accustomed to the on-the-spot information it provides. It's become essential to your work. There are some capabilities of the TIME System, however, that are not widely utilized.

The Identity Theft File of the TIME System allows officers to submit the information of identity theft victims into a national FBI database – the National Crime Information Center Identity Theft File. This information is then used to “flag” stolen identities and identify the imposter when he/she is encountered. In a time where fear of becoming a victim of identity theft is widespread and well-founded, any tool used to combat it is appreciated.

The Gang File is another underutilized tool of the TIME System. This file has been designed to provide law enforcement personnel with identifying information about violent criminal gangs and the members of those groups. Information in the gang file serves to warn officers of the potential danger posed by gang affiliated violent individuals.

These resources were designed to help us serve as a resource to local law enforcement. Government's first priority is public safety. To better utilize what we already have is a priority for me at the Wisconsin Department of Justice.

Sincerely,

2010 Attorney General's Summit on Public Safety

Caring for Cops: The Challenges of a Hazardous Profession

Tuesday evening, June 15, through Thursday afternoon, June 17, 2010
Chula Vista, Wisconsin Dells

Four police officers gunned down in a Sunday morning ambush at a coffee shop. The Pierce County, Washington, Sheriff's Department provided the initial response and served as the lead investigative agency. Command staff from the Pierce County Sheriff's Department will talk about what they found at the coffee shop and how they identified the shooting suspect. They will also discuss the aftermath of the shootings – how their officers are dealing with the deaths of the Lakewood officers along with the loss one of their own deputies who was killed responding to a domestic less than a month after the coffee shop slayings.

Statistics show that every 24 hours an officer will die from suicide...A law enforcement officer is more likely to die from suicide than a homicide. Donna Schulz, Law Enforcement Coordination Manager with the US Attorney's Office in Tampa, Florida, will share her unique experience. In addition, Ms. Schulz will outline the steps law enforcement agencies can take to help prevent officer suicides.

The 2010 Summit will also include presentations on the Heroin Epidemic in Wisconsin and Tactics for Psychological Survival in Law Enforcement. Assistant Attorney General Dave Perlman will provide an overview of recent court cases that impact law enforcement. A detailed agenda will be available in the April Bulletin.

The cost of the Summit is $50.00 per participant. All Summit materials and meals are included in the registration fee. Attendance at the Summit qualifies for 12 hours of the annual recertification training required by the Law Enforcement Standards Board.

REGISTER: On-line registration is available on WILENET (www.wilenet.org) or you can complete and mail-in the registration form that follows.

State v. Jermichael Carroll
Decided by the Wisconsin Supreme Court-
February 3rd, 2010

Issue:

This case deals with a search of a cell phone and raises several questions but unfortunately provides fewer answers and direction than we had hoped. Specifically the case holds that cell phones can be seized on site if there are probable cause and exigent circumstances. Also the case holds that if a cell phone rings while in police custody the police may answer the phone under the exigent circumstance doctrine. Also on a positive note the case clearly holds that there is a strong nexus between drug trafficking and cell phones. Unfortunately the case offers little guidance on the critical issue of whether a cell phone can be searched incident to an arrest.

Facts:

Two police officers were conducting surveillance on a residence as part of an armed robbery investigation. The police observed a white Ford Escort leave the residence, slow down as it passed the squad car and then speed away. The officers attempted to catch up with the Escort and reached 65 miles per hour on residential streets with speed limits of 25 miles per hour. Eventually the defendant pulled the Escort to an abrupt stop in a gas station lot and got out of the car while holding an object in his hands.

The officers could not identify what the defendant was holding so one of the officers drew his weapon and ordered the defendant to drop the object on the ground, which the defendant did. The officers then handcuffed the defendant. The officers then retrieved the dropped object which was a flip-styled cell phone. The cell phone was lying on the open ground and displayed an image on its face of the defendant smoking a long thin brown cigar like object that looked like a marijuana image.

The officers asked the defendant for identification and a routine check revealed the defendant had a suspended license. The defendant also had a prior record of being adjudicated delinquent for a drug-related felony two years earlier as a juvenile. The police then activated the menus of the cell phone, opened the image gallery and scrolled through it, and saw images showing illegal drugs, firearms, and large amounts of US currency. While the police were examining the cell phone, the cell phone rang and the police answered the call pretending to be the defendant. The caller proceeded to attempt to purchase cocaine.

Two days later the police sought a search warrant for the cell phone using both the contents of the phone call and the content of their search of the image gallery as their probable cause.

The Defendant's Argument:

The defendant argued that the evidence generated from the search warrant should have been suppressed since the police should not have seized his cell phone. The defendant continued that even if the original seizure was permissible the police should not have scrolled through the images and should not have answered the phone.

The State's Argument:

The state argued that the seizure was permissible since the police did not know what the object was and under the totality of the circumstances the police had the right as a safety measure to tell the defendant to drop the object and then had the right to pick it up and see what it was. Then the police saw in plain view the picture of the defendant with a marijuana image and that gave them probable cause to scroll through the images as well as to answer the cell when it rang while it was in police custody.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court Holding:

The Supreme Court agreed in part with the state and in part with the defendant but ultimately ruled that the evidence generated by the search warrant was admissible.

The Supreme Court held that under the circumstances, the chase, the original armed robbery surveillance, and the defendant's behavior in jumping out of his car, the police were entitled to pat-down the defendant and telling the defendant to drop the object he was holding is consistent with a pat-down. Then the Court reasoned the police saw the incriminating image of the defendant in plain view on the face of the cell phone. However, the court also ruled that even though the police now had probable cause to believe the cell contained evidence of drug trafficking they should not have scrolled through the images because they did not have exigent circumstances. The Supreme Court opined that since the police now had the phone in their custody they had the time to get a search warrant before scrolling through the phone.

However, the Court held that when the cell phone rang the police could answer the call on exigent circumstances since any evidence the call might reveal would likely not be around to be found after a warrant is procured. Unfortunately the Court did not address whether the scrolling of the cell phone could be justified as a search incident to an arrest theory but did incorporate some language that might suggest they would not be keen on the application of this doctrine for searches of cell phones found on arrested people.

Practical Application:

In a most narrow sense this case stands for the principle that the police can answer a cell phone seized from a defendant that rings while in police custody under the probable cause and exigent circumstance doctrine. However, this would likely only be true when the police already have evidence suggesting drug involvement. Now while this is nice this situation does not come up much.

A second useful point is that the court felt the picture of the defendant with a marijuana image to be very significant and seemed to think that this fact was sufficient to think the phone had evidence of drug activity. Also the court made clear that there is a strong nexus between drug trafficking and cell phones which makes this case useful for getting probable cause for a search warrant for a cell phone. However, the case offers no guidance on the long standing issue of whether a cell phone can be searched incident to arrest. My take is that it is likely that it can not be since if the arrest is for a non-drug matter you couldn't SIA the phone under "Gant" and if it is for drugs then you have the probable cause to take the safer route of seizing the phone and then procuring a search warrant for the phone.

Hypotheticals:

Under "Carroll" I submit the following hypotheticals and my thoughts as to their resolution.

- 1) Defendant arrested for a warrant on failure to pay child support, Cell phone found on his person.
Can't search the phone as a S.I.A. under Gant as there is no reason to believe there is evidence in the phone that supports the arrest. No other theory other than consent to search phone since there is no probable cause.
- 2) Defendant arrested on a drug charge. Can search the phone as an S.I.A. under Gant but not clear whether you can search it S.I.A. under Carroll. The problem is that you have probable cause to believe the phone contains drug evidence but since you can seize the phone and get a warrant you are missing exigent circumstances. The safest course therefore is to seize and get a warrant. If the phone is searched S.I.A. then perhaps an argument might be made that the evidence somehow could be destroyed from a remote source or that Carroll did not specifically answer this question leaving it open to interpretation.
- 3) Defendant arrested for a non-drug matter and like in Carroll evidence develops supporting probable cause for drug activity. Then under Carroll seize the phone and get a search warrant

This case was just decided and we will have to see how it plays out in practice and in the courts. The good news is the case gives nice guidance in getting probable cause for a search warrant for a phone but does not help at all in trying to extend the search incident to arrest doctrine in supporting warrantless searches of cell phones found on the person of the defendant.
