MESSAGE FROM THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Dear Law Enforcement Colleague –

Research and information are key components to support policy decisions within the criminal justice system. Whether in courts, corrections, law enforcement, or other aspects of the justice system, research and data-driven analyses are critical to identifying and understanding current issues and program outcomes. There is also a growing expectation that agencies receiving grant funding will implement programs that are centered on evidence-based practices and measureable outcomes. It is with this in mind that I am pleased to announce the recent addition of the Bureau of Justice Information and Analysis (BJIA) within the Department of Justice, Division of Law Enforcement Services. The new bureau was created to conduct research, analysis, and program evaluation to support policy and data-driven decision making on issues that impact Wisconsin's criminal justice system.

One of the initial projects for BJIA will involve the evaluation of the Treatment Alternatives and Diversion (TAD) program. This program, which received legislative support to expand from approximately $1 million to $4 million in 2014, is intended to provide funding to counties and tribes across the state to implement treatment courts and diversion programs. These programs are intended to reduce recidivism and increase public safety by offering services and monitoring of participants as alternatives to the traditional criminal justice system. With the expansion of TAD, BJIA will play a direct role in the ongoing evaluation of the program in terms of process, outcome, and cost-benefit comparisons. The evaluation role of BJIA also will expand into other areas with a focus on documenting the goals, outcomes, and impacts of various programs across the state.

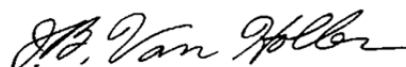

The BJIA also will be responsible for the Wisconsin Uniform Crime Reporting (UCR) program, which is the primary source for statewide crime and arrest statistics. Currently, more than 415 Wisconsin law enforcement agencies submit UCR data to the DOJ on a monthly basis either in summary or incident-based format. This information is then compiled for state-level analysis and submitted to the FBI. The Wisconsin UCR program is currently undergoing substantial improvements with a number of initiatives. For summary-based reporting, the UCR program is working to replace the current paper reporting process with a system for online submissions. This change will give agencies more direct control over their data, reduce paper flow and duplicate data entry, speed the processing time, and reduce errors in the monthly data collection process. A group of pilot agencies has been testing the online system and in a recent survey, agencies reported that the online submission process only required an average of 25 minutes of data entry time per month. In addition, all of the responding agencies indicated they found the program relatively easy to use, and more than 90 percent were satisfied with the online system.

In addition to the changes to summary reporting, BJIA is working to improve the process to submit data to the Wisconsin Incident-Based Reporting System (WIBRS) and provide new online tools for agencies to access and analyze their data. WIBRS provides tracking of nearly every major criminal justice issue facing law enforcement today, including more detailed information on offenses, victims, offenders, property, weapons, and related crime characteristics, than is available through summary-based reporting. More than 40 percent of the population in Wisconsin is currently covered by agencies reporting under WIBRS. A grant opportunity, currently open through the DOJ, is available to fund additional law enforcement agencies interested in moving to WIBRS. There is also a renewed emphasis at the national level to transition additional agencies onto Incident-Based Reporting (IBR). The National Crime Statistics Exchange (NCS-X) is a multi-agency initiative between the FBI, the Bureau of Justice Statistics (BJS) and other entities to develop a nationally representative sample of agencies participating in IBR. A number of Wisconsin agencies have been selected as potential participants in this project.

Looking ahead, the BJIA will be working to centralize and expand the availability of data for research and analysis. The bureau will be assessing the use of a variety of data sources such as UCR, criminal history, court, and corrections data, victimization surveys, and related information to address central questions facing our state's criminal justice system. This enhanced data sharing will open the door for data-driven research and policy development at multiple points in the process. In addition, BJIA will be conducting research on a wide variety of current and emerging criminal justice issues based on the needs of local law enforcement, the state Criminal Justice Coordinating Council, the legislature, and other criminal justice agencies. The BJIA is intended to provide a central resource for data and research to aid in decision making at all levels of the criminal justice system. Please join me in welcoming the new bureau to the DOJ. Thank you, and be safe.

Sincerely,

J.B. Van Hollen
Attorney General

State v. Price G. Turner III
Decided by the Wisconsin Court of Appeals
8/26/14

Issue:

Whether or not a 15 year old can consent to an interception of her telephone conversation so as to trigger Wisconsin's One Party Consent rule.

Facts:

The police responded to a request from a High School Guidance based on a female student's report that her father had been sexually assaulting her for several years. The girl was fifteen years old at the time of the report. The girl had described inappropriate touching which had started when she was around seven and had eventually evolved into intercourse when she turned thirteen.

The child continued to advise that she tried to resist the assaults but was unsuccessful until she told her father that if he continued to assault her, she would run away. After her ultimatum, the assaults stopped until four weeks before her report to the guidance counselor; she had woken up with her father on top of her and he proceeded to have intercourse with her.

The child agreed to wear a wireless recording device, with which the police could listen to her conversations with her father. During the overheard conversation the father admitted to the intercourse within the context of attempting to reassure his daughter that she could not get pregnant.

The police then entered the residence, arrested the father, Turner, and eventually interrogated him. Turner confessed.

The Defendant's Argument:

The defendant moved to suppress his recorded statements to his daughter, and consequently all the derivative evidence the recording had generated. Turner argued that because his daughter was under the age of 16, she lacked the capacity to consent to the interception as a matter of law.

The State's Argument:

The state argued that the girl was old enough to give consent and thus the statements were admissible under Wisconsin's one-party consent rule.

The Court of Appeals Holding:

The Wisconsin Court of Appeals agreed with the state. The court reasoned that while Turner was correct in his contention that as a matter of legislative judgment, a minor cannot provide consent in many situations, there is no such prohibition for consenting to an intercept of a phone conversation. The one party consent statute is silent as to any age limitation on consent. The court related the consent issue to how it is handled in Fourth Amendment jurisprudence, where issues such as the child's age and relative maturity are in play. Minors may consent to a search of a home, and the court in evaluating this situation look at age, intelligence, maturity, and the scope of the search or seizure to which the child consents. In deciding with the state the court noted that the daughter was well into her teens, was taking regular high school classes and there was no indication that she required remedial course work. She was not coerced into agreeing to the intercept and she was told that she did not have to comply if she did not wish to. The court agreed with the trial court's denial of the defendant's motion to suppress.

Cautionary Note;

Whether or not a child can consent to an intercept is a fact intensive inquiry. The police should take a cautious approach in requesting a child to consent in an intercept, and it would be wise to reassure the child that they do not have to do it, if they are uncomfortable with the process.
