MESSAGE FROM THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

Dear Law Enforcement Official:

The Wisconsin Department of Justice has a strong tradition of providing assistance to counties to improve the investigation and prosecution of child abuse and neglect. When prosecutors, law enforcement, and social workers come together on the front end of a child abuse case, it not only reduces the length of the investigation, it reduces secondary trauma to the child victim.

The most important piece of evidence in a child abuse case is the forensic interview. A solid interview conducted by a skilled interviewer protects the victim from testifying at the preliminary hearing, reduces the number of interviews required, and more often than not settles the case before trial.

DOJ offers a comprehensive training program for law enforcement and social workers in basic and advanced forensic interview techniques. We train over 200 professionals annually. DOJ provides funding to counties to equip videotape interview rooms. To qualify, a county must demonstrate:

- that law enforcement and/or social workers have received both basic and advanced forensic interview training.
- support from key county agencies such as the district attorney, child protective services and significant law enforcement jurisdictions.

To date, 40 of Wisconsin's 72 counties videotape over 50% of their child forensic interviews. DOJ funded 13 of these videotape interview rooms (serving 15 counties). Two additional counties will have rooms in use by January of 2007.

DOJ awards grants each year for the development of child advocacy centers. Most recently, we funded the videotape equipment for the newly-opened C.A.R.E. Center in Waukesha County. DOJ annually awards $15,000 to CACs Wisconsin, a not for profit organization that serves as an umbrella agency for Wisconsin's accredited child advocacy centers.

The department also provides a prosecutor specializing in child abuse and neglect as a resource to local prosecutors. The DOJ Training and Standards Bureau tracks emerging issues in child abuse and neglect, and incorporates those issues into law enforcement training. The DOJ Office of Crime Victim Services - Grants Administration Team works to assure that available grant dollars are strategically distributed to provide the best, comprehensive victim service possible.

Child abuse cases pose unique challenges. We can best meet these challenges through the multiple systems available to us on a collaborative basis. Thank you for the work you do on behalf of Wisconsin's children.

Very truly yours,

State v. Young Decided by the Wisconsin Supreme Court- 7/12/06

Introduction:

This case involves the test for determining when a seizure of a person occurs within the 4th amendment. The case also deals with the obstruction and resisting statute.

Facts:

The defendant was in a car with Illinois plates with four other men late in the evening in a high crime area. The men stayed in the parked car for several minutes when the police decided to check the situation out. The officer stopped his squad in the middle of the street next to the car behind the defendant's car and illuminated the defendant's car with his spotlight. Before the officer could get out of his squad the defendant exited his vehicle and the officer ordered the defendant back to his vehicle. The defendant continued to walk away from his vehicle.

The officer continued to yell at the defendant to stop and return to his car but the defendant continued to ignore the officer and then started to run toward a nearby house. The defendant ran up to the front porch when the officer who was chasing him finally was able to grab him. The officer struggled with the defendant until he was eventually able to subdue and handcuff him. During the struggle the defendant had slipped out of the coat that he was wearing and threw it towards the door of the house. The officer found inside the coat a vial containing marijuana.

Defendant's Argument:

The defendant raised three issues. 1) The officer lacked reasonable suspicion when he initiated the contact and thus everything that happened after that was fruit of the poisonous tree. 2) The obstruction charge should be dismissed since the officer did not have reasonable suspicion to initiate the contact in the first place and thus was not acting with lawful authority. 3) Similarly the charge for resisting should also be dismissed.

The State's Position:

The state argued that whether or not the officer originally had reasonable suspicion was irrelevant since the defendant did not stop and there was no seizure and that once the defendant started to run from the officer that gave the officer the requisite suspicion to chase and ultimately apprehend the defendant.

The Court Holding:

The Wisconsin Supreme Court initially held that the officer did have reasonable suspicion to make the initial contact. However the Court also held that there was no seizure initially because the defendant had not yet been physically restrained nor had the defendant complied with a police directive. So, even if the officer did not have reasonable suspicion at first there was no issue since the defendant was not seized and after the defendant started to run away there was a reasonable suspicion to chase after him. This holding reprised earlier holdings that attempts to flee the police with nothing more provides the necessary reasonable suspicion upon which to initiate a valid "Terry" stop.

As to the obstruction charge the court held that after the defendant had started to run the police ordered him to stop and at this point they had reasonable suspicion and thus were acting with lawful authority. Finally when the officer finally caught up to the defendant the ensuing struggle met the statutory definition of resisting.

Key Points:

Interestingly, this case could have been simply handled by the Court's determination that the police had reasonable suspicion at the beginning of the contact. However the Court went further to hold that even if there was no reasonable suspicion there was no seizure since the defendant did not comply with the officer and was not physically restrained. Thus the law remains in Wisconsin that there is no seizure of the person unless the defendant complies with the officer's will or is physically restrained. A side point of this case is that it is obstruction for a subject to ignore a police officer's lawful request to stop.

NATIONAL DENTAL IMAGE REPOSITORY

The FBI Criminal Justice Information Services Division (CJIS) recently announced the creation of another tool law enforcement may use to aid in solving missing & unidentified person cases.

The National Dental Image Repository (NDIR) has been created and is now available on the FBI's LEO (Law Enforcement Online). The primary function of the NDIR is to provide a place for agencies to voluntarily house supplemental dental images on the web. This will allow for the information to be easily retrieved by qualified individuals performing dental comparisons between the Missing/Wanted Person files and the Unidentified Person files in NCIC.

The NDIR also provides agencies with an opportunity to have their dental coding reviewed for accurate and consistent NCIC coding by an experienced forensic odontologist. Submitted records will be reviewed and compared to the information coded on the NCIC record. If discrepancies are noted, the agency will be contacted and advised of the errors. Agencies may opt out of the review of records.

To participate in the NDIR agencies convert their dental information to a specified electronic format and email the information to NDIR@leo.gov. Needed information includes:

- The NDIR Submission Form (WORD)
- A digitized copy of the NCIC record (JPEG)
- A digitized copy of the dental condition worksheet (PDF or JPEG)
- A digitized copy of the dental report form (PDF or JPEG)
- Digital scans of all available radiographs (PDF or JPEG)
- Digital scans of the dentist's treatment notes and odontograms (PDF)
- Digital scans other miscellaneous information useful for identification purposes, such as photos, models, other head/neck radiographs, etc. (JPEG)

Further details regarding the formatting of each information item (resolution, file naming conventions, etc.) are available on the LEO site in the CJIS NCIC special interest group area.
